

Weekend Links: L.A. Private School Libraries Embrace Digital Age, Definitive Guide To Elementary School Momsâ€™

Description

I think dropping your kid off for the first day of school is really, really hard. Even the second day. And the second week, too! 10 Ways To Ease Your Childâ€™s Preschool Separation Anxiety (NYT)

Such a good post about preparing your child for the non-academic demands of kindergarten. I found that to be a bigger challenge than the academic since my daughter started kindergarten reading. For my son, it was a longer day to sit still and learn to read. (The Mom Beat on Orgeon Live)

Hilarious! Snarky In The Suburbs gives us her definitive guide to the â€œelementary school mother.â€ Recognize her? (Snarky In The Suburbs)

If you donâ€™t follow us on Facebook, hereâ€™s what you missed! From our Facebook Page:

The venerable Pacific Oaks Preschool in Pasadena had to shut down their full-time program, leaving 44 families without a preschool (and no advance notice) and 4 teachers without jobs. Part-time program remains open. Parents are outraged. (LA Times). And, I was sent this website that has been set up anonymously by parents (most likely) to update families on the situation at Pacific Oaks. www.valuethechild.org

Excellent piece about the role of private school libraries in the digital age. Includes “What’s hot and what’s not in libraries now.” Co-authored by librarians at Viewpoint, Buckley and Brentwood schools. (NAIS)
