The Littlest Redshirts Sit Out Kindergarten-NY Times

Description

Interesting articleâ€I have child who is one of the oldest in the class and one child who is the youngest in the class. My daughter started kindergarten at age 6 (late July birthday) and is one of the oldest in her class. My son, on the other hand, entered DK at age 4 (mid-July birthday). He was the youngest in the class and entered kindergarten at age 5 and was the youngest in kindergarten too. So far, so good for both of my kids. I relied on my preschool director for guidance on this issue.

CULTURAL STUDIES

The Littlest Redshirts Sit Out Kindergarten

By PAMELA PAUL

Published: August 20, 2010

tentive early childhood rituals â€" the flashcards, the Kumon, the Dora the Explorer, the in cutting-edge playgrounds â€" who wouldn't want to give their children a head start when to set off for school? itâ TYVITTERne to set off for school?

RECOMMEND

Stephanie Diar uzanne Collier opted for or John, 5, rather than her than send her 5-year-old son, John, to kindergarten this year, the 36-year-old olled him in a "transitionalâ€kindergarten "without all the rigor.å€He's id, "and not quite ready to focus on a full day of classroom work.â€Citing a Pointâ€about Canadian hockey players, which found that the strongest players were 's older, he'll have the strongest chance to do the best.â€ bught, and it is not new. "Redshirtingâ€of kindergartners â€" the term comes Ig the participation of college athletes in competitive games â€" became increasingly shows no signs of waning.

the 2008, the most appent year for which census data is available, 17 percent of children were 6 or older when they êntered the kendergatter classroom. Sand tables have been replaced by worksheets to a degree that's supposing it is standards of a decade ago. Blame it on No Child Left Behind and the race to get children persequation by third grade: Kindergarten has steadily become, as many educators put it, â€æthe new first grade.â€

What once seemed like an aberration â€" something that sparked fierce dinner party debates â€" has come to seem like the norm. But that doesn't make it any easier for parents.

"We agonized over it all year,â€said Rachel Tayse Baillieul, a food educator in Columbus, Ohio, where the cutoff date is Oct. 1. Children whose birthdates fall later must wait until the next year to start school. But her daughter, Lillian, 4, was born five days before, on Sept. 25, which would make her one of the youngest in the daughter, Lillian, 4, was class.

To read the rest of the article, click here.

Watermark

Category

1. Beyond The Brochure

Date Created August 22, 2010 Author admin